

DESCRIPTIVE BEER STYLES

ALE	Ales are brewed using top fermenting yeast that performs at warmer temperatures. This gives most ales a sweet, full bodied and fruity taste. They are brewed in a variety of styles including Blonde, Red, Amber, Brown and Black.
BOCK	Bock beers are a bottom fermenting lager that usually takes months of cold storage to make them smooth. Bock beers are usually stronger than a typical lager. They usually range in color from dark amber to nearly black with robust malt character.
CIDER	Ciders are made from fermented apple juice and range from being dry and fruity to sweeter with a more complex style and high effervescence.
IPA	These are ales that are usually maltier, have higher alcohol content and are brewed with more hops than regular ales.
LAGER	Lagers are brewed using bottom fermenting yeast and aged at colder temperatures. The cold temperatures help create a crisper tasting beer.
OKTOBERFEST	Oktoberfest is a full bodied, rich, toasty lager with a mild hop taste. Typically these beers range in color from amber to dark copper in color, and have a medium to high alcohol content.
PILSNER	Pilsners are a light straw to golden color and clear. They are brewed using bottom fermenting yeast which produces a smooth and crisp taste with a clean malty palate.
PORTER	Porters are generally a dark brown beer but will occasionally lean more toward a black color. They have a bold roasted to burnt malty taste and high levels of hop bitterness that comes from the use of roasted, un-malted barley.
PALE ALE	Pale ale is an ale made with predominantly pale malt. Pale ales are known to be hop-forward with a malty flavor and a golden to amber color. The highest proportion of pale malts results in a lighter color.
SOUR	Sours are tart-tasting and made with bacteria and yeasts. Sours come in a wide range of styles and can run the gamut from mouth-puckeringly sour to barnyard funky to fruity and light.
STOUT	Stouts are a fuller bodied and richer version of a porter and are usually brewed to have a lower carbonation level. They are very dark in color and often have a toast, chocolate or coffee like taste.
WHEAT	Wheat beers are usually top fermented and are generally unfiltered with a hazy appearance due to the type of yeast used. A lot of wheat beers have a low hop bitterness and high carbonation, giving these beers a very crisp and refreshing profile.
